In Nunavut and the Northwest Territories, the proportion of children who lived in food insecure households in 2014 was 10%. By comparison, the proportion of children who lived in food insecure households in the rest of Canada was higher, ranging from 20% in British Columbia to 40% in Yukon.

Food insecurity is a complex issue, and the data presented here highlights the importance of addressing the root causes of food insecurity. It is crucial to support policies and programs that address the underlying issues, such as poverty, lack of access to affordable healthy food, and unstable employment, to create a more equitable and sustainable future.
